

A dark, atmospheric illustration of a castle on a hill and a dragon by a river at night. The castle, with its tall tower and crenellated walls, is illuminated from within, casting a warm glow. A river flows in the foreground, reflecting the light. A large, dark dragon with glowing yellow eyes is coiled on the right side of the river. The background features dark, silhouetted mountains under a night sky with a crescent moon and scattered stars.

Morpheus was mighty, fierce, and grand,
And older than any in the realm of sand.
He was wise, enormous, and truly brave,
With eyes like fire in a twilight cave.

Beside the River of sweet Oblivion,
That sang a lullaby, a soft delusion,
The king built his tower close to its stream,
To drift into sleep with the flow of a dream.
