

His rust-red tail, a fading glow,
The last bright color he'd come to know.
Like something dreamed beyond his sight,
He moved with caution, dread in plight.

He stepped inside, not to be mislead,
Fear in his heart, but courage ahead.
The darkness wrapped so cold, so still,
An echoing void, a silent chill.