

His wings gave a flap, instinctive and wide,
And lifted up Popcorn in powerful stride.
He soared past the peak, the smoke, and the flame,
Far from the fear and fire no one can tame.

O'er valleys and hills he flew with grace,
Till a shimmering lake appeared in place.
He dove through the air and landed below,
Gasping for air, his eyes all aglow.